About Unit About the property's interior. The term townhouse has come to be used to describe non-uniform living units that are designed to mimic a detached home. The distinction between living units called apartments and those called townhouses is that a townhouse usually consists of multiple floors and has its own outside door as opposed to being on only one floor and/or having access via either an interior hallway or an exterior balcony–	About Unit About the neighborhood and exterior surroundings for the property. Townhouses are generally found in complexes. Large complexes often have high security, resort facilities such as swimming pools, gyms, parks and playground equipment. Typically, a townhouse has a strata title; i.e., a type of title where the common property (landscaped area, public corridors, building structure, etc.) is owned by a corporation of	About Unit About the neighborhood and exterior surroundings for the property. style walkway. Another distinction individual owners and the houses is that in most areas of Canada, on the property are owned by the apartment refers to rental housing, individual owners.

while townhouse typically refers to an individually owned dwelling, with no other unit beneath or above. Describe the indoor aspects of your townhouse unit whether it is for sale or rent.

Townhouses can also be "stacked". This refers to multiple units vertically (typically two), normally each with its own private entrance from the street or at least from the outside.
